This golf course home in SouthWood was built three years ago and was recently acquired by our clients, who love to entertain. But something was missing on their large back porch and backyard.

Good news - the original builder did leave a roughed in area for a future outdoor kitchen. Together with the clients, we designed an outdoor kitchen area featuring a raised bar, mini refrigerator and granite countertops. A masonry wood burning fireplace with wood storage and flagstones was added just steps away from the porch - a perfect setting for cool nights with friends and family.

The main challenge was convincing the architectural review board to allow us to use stone instead of brick, which they initially recommended. A series of meetings and product submittals finally did the trick.
